There is conflict in Mosul between the ISI and JAI. JAI in Baghdad or the areas near Baghdad were working with the Awakening movement. ISI Mosul was afraid that JAI Mosul would start working with the Awakening. JAI Mosul was given an ultimatum by the ISI that JAI would have to swear Bayat to the ISI if JAI wanted to continue conducting operations in Mosul. JAI was also given the option to produce a written statement denouncing the Awakening in lieu of swearing Bayat. JAI chose to produce a statement and distribute flyers claiming no connection with the Awakening. JAI claimed they had separated from the JAI and started a new group called the Jaysh al-Fatha al-Mubin.

Detainee and Abu Sarni, the ISI judge at the time, met with Abu Mahir the AAS religious amir and Abu Sumaya, the JAI religious amir on several occasions to try and resolve a dispute. Two members of the ISI and their cousin, a member of JAI, were shot and killed in the Hay al-Sana' area by members of AAS. The Sharia members of all of the groups involved met to discuss the issue in an AAS house on the east side of Mosul in August of 2007. Testimony and witness statements were taken regarding the attack. Detainee concluded that one death was by accident and two were intentional. The AAS Sharia member claimed that all of the deaths were accidental. There was still no agreement regarding the issue at the time of Detainee's capture. The families of the victims are seeking financial compensation for the loss of the three men.
